

Ajit Pai, you scum human being. I strongly oppose this gut to net neutrality so you can make a few more dollars from your donors. The United States is supposedly the land of the free – and going against freedom of speech and freedom of information should not be the job of any government agency – let alone the FCC; and to do so with the hopes of making some more money is disgusting.

For the sake of the country and the first amendment, net neutrality better be here to stay. I know it won't stop the FCC from making money, and I'm sure you have plenty to go around as well.

Gutting net neutrality would also place undue burdens on certain communiqués between individuals. I doubt you care about this either, but not too many people have choices with regards to their providers. If one becomes better than the other, some people might lose expedient access entirely.

Net Neutrality better be here to stay.
